Birds Public Benefactors Centrary to popular opinion, says the biological survey, various birds eat even the bairy types of caterpillars, like those of the tussock gypsy and brown tail moths, and the tent caterpillars. That bureau has found forty-five specier of birds which feed extensively on the alfalfa weevil, while sixty-six attack the cotton boll-weevil. Orioles will pick weevils out of the squares or flower buds of the cotten while swallows feed on them when in flight and extending their range. Mallard ducks have been effectively used in ponds for mosquito central, Redeyed vireos seem to be attracted by fall webworms, while cutworms form a large part of the diet of starlings. crows and jackdaws. Blackbirds help to keep down the number of boll worms and many other pests. Sparrows and other birds have been observed to clean up infestations of termites. Birds should be regarded as an ever-present force that should be kept at a maximum efficiency by pro tective measures so that their service may be utilized whenever possible.
